THE switchboard, which is the most intricate and interesting adjunct of the telephone business, is divided into sections and there are usually three operators' positions in each section. An operator sits at each position and from this point can reach the line of every subscriber in the exchange. However, only a limited number of subscribers' answering jacks terminate in front of each operator. This causes it to be possible for an operator to connect a calling party with any number on the switchboard, but she can answer the calls of only a few subscribers. Whenever a
